Early Life and Influences

Michelle LaVaughn Robinson was born on January 17, 1964, in Chicago, Illinois. Her parents, Fraser and Marian Robinson, instilled in her a strong work ethic and a deep respect for education. Despite the challenges facing her family, Michelle excelled in school and eventually earned a scholarship to Princeton University.

At Princeton, Michelle faced both racial and academic obstacles. However, she persevered, graduating with honors in sociology and African American studies. She went on to attend Harvard Law School, where she met her future husband, Barack Obama.

Marriage and Family

Michelle and Barack Obama married in 1992. They have two daughters, Malia and Sasha. Michelle's role as a wife and mother has been central to her identity. She has been a vocal advocate for families and has worked tirelessly to promote healthy eating and physical activity.

Life in the White House

In 2008, Barack Obama was elected President of the United States. Michelle became the first African American First Lady in U.S. history. During her time in the White House, she used her platform to promote a range of issues, including education, nutrition, and military families.

Michelle Obama's tenure as First Lady was marked by elegance, grace, and a deep commitment to public service. She became a role model for women and girls around the world, inspiring them to pursue their dreams and overcome adversity.

Post-White House Life

After leaving the White House in 2017, Michelle Obama continued to be a powerful voice for change. She launched a production company called Higher Ground Productions, which produces films and documentaries that explore social issues. She also published a bestselling book of essays titled "The Light We Carry."
